The interiors boast intricate patterns of plants and vines, adding to the house's charm. Khum Wong Buri houses intriguing rooms, such as Chao Mae Bua Tha's room, the living room, and the bedroom. These rooms are furnished with various antique items, including cabinets, beds, tables, chairs, dressing tables, cups, bowls, silverware, ancient weapons, and Buddha images from the Chiang Saen and U-Thong periods. Ancient pictures decorate the walls, narrating the fascinating story of this house and the people who lived within its walls.

Continuing your journey, you'll visit Khum Chao Luang, another ancient house in Phrae. Under the building, you'll find three rooms used for storing belongings, money, and treasures. Khum Chao Luang is gracefully decorated with fretwork and intricately carved patterns, showcasing the craftsmanship of famous Chinese artisans of that era. The 72 windows and doors, shingle roofs known as "Mai Pan Kled," the Pan-Yah style roof with a rectangular porch, and the triangular porch roof create an exquisite visual appeal. The gables and eaves are adorned with beautifully carved fretwork patterns, further enhancing the building's aesthetic charm.
